Women Sustaining Woodlands

Forest Stewardship 101

- If you want to be a forest steward, but don't know where to begin...
- If you own woodlands or work with a Conservation Commission or Land Trust...
- If you want to be a more informed voice in public land management decisions...
...this is the workshop for you!

Spring will be here before you know it – start planning now!

Do want to improve wildlife habitat? Derive future income from timber? Conserve habitat for rare or endangered species? Create trails for quiet woodland walks?

Forest Stewardship can take many forms; from hands-off conservation to active management for sustainable timber production, and everything in between.

At this workshop, professional foresters and wildlife experts will provide an introduction to reading a forested landscape, and techniques to formulate your individual stewardship goals. Then we'll be heading into the woods for some hands-on experience in using these tools. Learn how to evaluate the resources of your land and how to move your forest management and wildlife habitat objectives forward. Share your questions and experiences with other women interested in the same.
